History and Culture

During the “Warring States” period, Joetsu was situated at the base of the legendary warlord Uesugi Kenshin’s fortress, Kasugayama Castle. The region has been an important center for politics, economy and culture in Echigo Province (now Niigata) since the Echigo provincial government was established during the Nara period. In the Edo period, Matsudaira Tadateru, the sixth son of Takugawa Ieyasu, became the first lord of Takada Castle, which he had built in the Takada area. It became the center of government for Echigo and four northern Shinano districts. Naoetsu, which was a port of call for the Kitamaebune trading ships, prospered as the gateway to the sea for the Takada domain. Later, the area was subdivided and reorganized by the Meiji government. In 1971, Takada City and Naoetsu City merged to form Joetsu City, in an effort to centralize the region. In 2005, the region was again reorganized by incorporating 14 towns and villages into Joetsu City, which was the largest municipal merger in Japan at that time.

Cherry Blossoms

The spring tradition of cherry blossoms in Takada Castle Site Park has been famous since Niigata was known as Echigo. The tradition began when the local veterans’ association first planted 2,200 cherry trees in 1909 to commemorate the stationing of the Imperial Army’s 13th Division to Takada. Presently there are more than 4,000 cherry trees which bloom each spring in the park and its surroundings. As night falls, some 3,000 paper lanterns illuminate the park, creating a magical scene with the castle’s three-storied turret and surrounding moat, which has become known as one of the three greatest night-time cherry blossom views in Japan.

Takada: The Castle Town

The Takada area of Joetsu still retains much of the character of its past as a castle town. You can see the long and narrow “machiya,” (traditional townhouses) or the cobblestone walkways and lattice doors that front the “gangi” streets. “Gangi” refers to the eaves that extend over the walkways to secure a passage during the snowy months. Maintaining these private eaves for the benefit of others symbolize the spirit of mutual support which is necessary in the snow country. The length of the remaining gangi streets in Takada is approximately 12 kilometers, the longest in Japan.

Top: Takada Sekaikan is one of the oldest running movie theaters in the country.

Right: The rare mix of Meiji-era Western and Japanese architecture seen in the “Former Division Commander’s Residence,” which now operates as a restaurant.

Lord Uesugi Kenshin

Uesugi Kenshin, born in present day Joetsu City, unified Echigo Province which had been in turmoil for many years from his base at Kasugayama Castle. He fought against the famous warlords of the Warring States period, including Takeda Shingen, Hojo Ujiyasu, and Oda Nobunaga. However, it is said that his battles were fought more from a sense of justice than for greed. Many historical sites associated with Kenshin, beginning with the site of Kasugayama Castle itself, dot the city.

Kenshin's vision was focused on a bright future for the region.

The “mountain castle” Kasugayama Castle made skillful use of the natural terrain and was said to be impregnable. The changing colors of the single ginkgo tree in the second hold are said to herald the coming of winter.

After passing through a tranquil area, the road opens up to Kasuga Shrine. The shrine is the basis for the name of the mountain, Kasugayama.

Kasugayama Shrine has enshrined Uesugi Kenshin as its deity. Throughout the year, people visit the shrine hoping to share in the warlord’s strength.

Naoetsu: Town of the Sea and the Railway

Naoetsu boasts good beaches where people enjoy swimming and marine sports all year long. The beaches are shallow and the water quality is good. The “Umigatari” aquarium features the largest number of Magellanic penguins in Japan.

Naoetsu also has a history of being the birthplace of the railway in Niigata prefecture. Special touring trains as well as steam locomotives to ride at the Rail Park attracts train fans from near and far.

Naoetsu Port: Supporting Our Livelihood

Since ancient times, the Port of Naoetsu has prospered as a key port in the region, and has been so designated as an important port. It is a transportation and commerce hub connecting to other ports in Japan, Asia, and the rest of the world. Naoetsu Port also serves as a link between the mainland and Sado Island, where the “Kinzan Goldmine” may soon be registered as a World Cultural Heritage Site.

In addition, Naoetsu serves as an energy hub by importing LNG (liquid natural gas) and converting it into electricity and gas to supply to the Tohoku, Kanto, Chubu and Hokuriku regions. In this way, economies as well as people’s daily lives are supported.

Global Enterprises Born in Joetsu

Industry of Joetsu

The city of Joetsu has long prospered as a key transportation hub. Even today, the city continues to play an important role in connecting the region to the rest of Japan with the Port of Naoetsu, the Hokuriku Shinkansen (“bullet train”), the Hokuriku Expressway and the Joshinetsu Expressway.

Unravelling the city’s history, we can see that the heavy snowfall played a part in the development of the city’s industry. Melting snow was used for hydropower generation, leading to a relatively rapid advance of hydro-electricity plants, which in turn contributed to the development of the chemical and steel industries.

Thanks to the unique craftsmanship and know-how cultivated here over many years, the industry leaders of today will be able to thrive not only in Japan but around the world.

Nippon Soda Company, Ltd, Nihongi Plant

The Nippon Soda Company's main plant in Nihongi Village (now Nihongi Ward, Joetsu City), exports chemical products and agricultural chemicals worldwide. To adapt to the times, in recent years the factory has been focused on manufacturing pharmaceutical additives and new agricultural products.

A black bowl filled with fluffy white rice, with steam rising from it. In the background, there are wooden chopsticks and other dishes, including a red-rimmed bowl and a black bowl with a white spoon, all set against a dark background.

The Highest Quality “Rice”

Have you ever eaten rice grown in Joetsu? The fragrance spreads as it glistens in the steam from a freshly cooked pot. Each bite releases a sweetness that will leave you satisfied with this fine white rice, even by itself.

The taste of the Koshihikari brand of rice has won the top “Special A” ranking from the Japan Grain Inspection Association for ten years running and its deliciousness is guaranteed.

A Town of “Cultured” Food

The humidity in Joetsu is high throughout the year, making it an ideal environment for fermentation. As a result, many fermented foods have been incorporated into the local cuisine, which has been enjoyed for generations. The fermented, or “cultured” foods of Joetsu were born of the region’s natural environment and traditions, leading to award-winning foods including sake and miso, as well as pickled vegetables, seafood, seasonings, unfiltered sake (“doburoku”) and wine. The culture of fermentation has flourished in this snowy region, making these foods part of the cultural heritage which gives color and tradition to the dining table.

Joetsu-grown Ingredients

Farmers bring their fresh fruits and vegetables to direct outlets throughout the city. The seasonal produce sold at these markets are freshly picked at the peak of their flavor. The fun of these markets is discovering which fresh treats will be available when you visit!

Foods from the Snow Cellar

The “Yukimuro,” or snow cellar, is a natural refrigerator that has been used in the snow country of Joetsu for generations. Without the use of electricity, air cooled by snow is circulated in the snow cellar. Even during summer months, the stored food is not subject to stress, and in fact benefits from the natural sweetening caused by the cold temperatures.

JOETSU

The “Made in Joetsu” brand is the name given to the specialty goods and industrial products promoted by the city to the rest of Japan and the world. These unique products undergo strict screening based on originality, reliability and local flavor. The products which carry the “Made in Joetsu” label are attracting significant attention.
